Yes, the word "district" should be "distinct" (which is as it should be!)

It's a distinct possibility that there is a typo in your otherwise very helpful rundown.... and your suggestion about Burnaby has given me another idea.....[duck!]

Supposing, as you suggest, T-Link put its depot in Burnaby and, concurrently, the West Van Blue Bus system was to expand to take up the slack on the North Shore - would there be enough room on Lloyd Avenue to house the additional number of buses required? Has the question been asked and answered already?

I realize that does not address the issue of the need to deploy buses eastward, and it does not address the issue of additional pollution and noise, but I haven't heard any complaints about the existing Lloyd facility....is anyone else aware of any?

Lastly, to be fair to all sides, I have spoken with a couple of people who feel that the BC Rail lands "are at least industrial already and not in a residential neighbourhood." I don't agree but thought I should put it forward anyway.....

To say the least, I was disappointed with council's decision on this item. I am not aware of any district resident who favours including the depot use in this area, much less a groundswell of our residents who want to see a depot placed in such a non-central location. Certainly the local community seems rather strongly opposed. The threat of tax exemption, although perhaps not currently proposed, is a district (and likely) possibility in the future. Unlike private uses which evolve with time the depot is a rather static business - likely locking down land uses there for 50 years or more. We have to think long-term and to me there are better uses of these lands than a bus depot.

However the real danger is that the proposed (bad) bylaw may be adopted because of the fact that its defeat would set us back to square one. Make no mistake - council cannot simply remove a use and adopt the rest of the bylaw - as much as council may wish to do so.

The way out of this may be for council to reconsider what happened last night. Timing is critical here.

Bottom line: I see no particular advantage to having more buses serviced/stored on North Shore. If we are cut off from mainland by a catastrophic event then the buses would be of limited use anyway. Storage with centralized servicing in Burnaby makes sense, albeit a little inefficient on fuel to get them to the North Shore periodically.

However, considering the buses run all day (and night?) that overhead is minor.
