Trail builder injured on the shore?

I just caught a bit of it on the news tonight, but Global said that there were some mtb'ers working on a trail, and one of the trees they were working with fell on one of them.

Like I say I didn't see the whole thing, but the story sounds bad. Makes it sound like the builders were cutting down a tree or otherwise damaging it and it fell on them.

Anyone have the whole story on this???

PS - hope this wasn't on Ernie land ...

freak accident

It was Jeremy. I think part of a dead tree came down and glanced off the side of his head/shoulder. Fortunately he was wearing a safety helmet. I don't think anyone knows the extent of the injury, but hopefully it's nothing more serious than bruising.

He was in good spirits when they were wheeling him off the trail. The S&R people were very professional in dealing with the situation.

Skid in your shorts, not on the trail.

I'm glad he was wearing a safety helmet! 😊

Healing vibes to you Jeremy!

Ouch - Healing vibes Jeremy.

Someone needs to talk to Global, their wording was very ambiguous, made it sound like live trees were being cut down.

He was cutting down a dead tree (snag). They often can be hazardous as they could fall onto the trail at any time.

I just read in another thread that Jeremy was checked out and sent home. That's great to hear.
